1. The machine shop of Pomorske Radionice (Rad Maritime Workshops),¹ a component of Pomorsko Gradjevinsko Preduzece (Pomgrad Naval Construction Enterprise), which employs some 100 skilled workers and laborers, is located on the shore in the Poljud section of Split. The entire workshop comprises a single building 80 by 20 meters in size. There are two departments in this shop, the machine shop proper and the blacksmith shop.
2. The machine shop is equipped with six turning lathes, four grinding machines, one large 250-millimeter boring machine of American manufacture, two smaller boring machines, a cylinder-grinding machine, and other unspecified machinery essential to the repair of motors.
3. The blacksmith shop, which is very large and equipped with all necessary blacksmith tools, employs approximately 20 skilled workers.
4. There is a large storeroom in the same building with the machine shop and blacksmith shop, while two smaller storerooms are situated some 20 meters from the main building. Tools and spare parts, which are manufactured in the Rad workshops, are stored in these supply rooms. Relatively few of the spare parts used by the Rad workshops are imported from abroad or obtained from other Yugoslav factories. Owing to the slowness in the production of parts, frequently completion of repair of motors is reportedly greatly delayed. The Rad workshops have allegedly been unsuccessful in producing more complicated spare parts. The Rad workshops allegedly repair motors of small vessels under the jurisdiction of the Central Adriatic Harbor Directorate.
